Our day in Cockington

After the normal school bus round we had our lessons and talked about love today. So some people had flowers in their hair because of that topic.

After lunch in the school yard with sandwiches, fruit and crisps we went to Cockington on foot.

We walked for about one hour.

Cockington is a village near Torquay. It is one of the most beautiful villages in England with interesting cottages, and you can have the famous Devon cream tea there.

When we arrived we waited for a bit and some of us tried some delicious ice-cream

Then we made our way over to the tea room "The Seven Dials" in a big house surrounded by a park that made our scones freshly.

Everybody sat down at long or smaller tables and we got a cup of tea with milk. Then we were served a box with a warm scone, clotted cream and strawberry jam. Our teachers told us to cut the scone in halves, put on the cream like butter and then the jam. Some of us tried to eat the scone like a hamburger, but that was impossible.

After we had eaten the scones we had time to take some photos and go to the park or playground and look around the place.

Suddenly it began to rain and we had lots of fun in the rain. Sadly we were not allowed to have fun after a few minutes because we had to dry and wait for the bus to pick us up.

But because the bus could not come down the narrow street directly to Cockington, we walked up the hill for 500 metres. We had to get on quickly because some drivers in the rush hour were not very patient and sounded their horns. In the next street there was a traffic jam because of our bus and one woman made gestures in her car.

We went a bit earlier home today but that was good too.
